

ABSTRACT

The United States of America is a superpower that allows its citizens to possess free firearms. This freedom is one of the public policies of the United States Government that reap a lot of controversy. Freedom of possession of firearms in the United States is regulated in "Bill Of Rights", which is the highest constitution of the United States, precisely on the second amendment of the constitution. The policy of ownership of firearms by citizens of the United States actually more negative impacts than positive impacts. This is then the background of the controversy between the supporters of arms ownership rights, and also the support groups of tight firearms control. Supporting groups of firearms controls judge that unclear weapon control will make many cases of gun-related violence. But the arms proprietor rights group judged, that if the possession of firearms is limited, the United States Government is equally providing an insecure situation to the social life of US citizens.
