RUSSIAN ECONOMIC-ENERGY INTERESTS IN KAZAKHSTAN DURING PRESIDENT VLADIMIR PUTIN'S ERA

ABSTRACT

The relationship between Russia and Kazakhstan in the economic-energy field has undergone development over time. Starting from Kazakhstan's independence, its availability of oil and gas had not yet been exposed to the international world. Until the era of Putin, where large oil and gas fields were found in the post-Soviet region and Russia tried to gain economic benefits from Kazakhstan's oil and gas fields. Russia's interest in gaining economic benefits from oil and gas in Kazakhstan will be seen from the ownership of Kazakhstan's oil reserves, Russian-owned oil and gas companies operating in Kazakhstan, and the ownership of Russia's oil and gas pipelines in Kazakhstan. This research uses Jack C. Plano's National Interest theory related to economic well-being with qualitative research methods.
