ABSTRACT

This study aims to (1) examine the activities of the Mataraman Granary carried out by the women farmers of the "Kenanga" 08 Women Farmers Group, (2) analyze the dimensions of women farmers' participation in managing Mataraman Granary activities, (3) identify the elements of women farmers' participation in managing Mataraman Granary activities, and (4) analyze the types of women farmers' participation in managing Mataraman Granary activities. This research employed a qualitative approach with a case study method. The data sources consisted of primary and secondary data. Data were collected through interviews, observations, and documentation. Source triangulation was used to check the data validity, and data collection, data reduction, and conclusion drawing were used to analyze the data. The results showed that (1) Mataraman Granary activities in KWT "Kenanga" 08 include cultivation, product processing, marketing, and food training, all of which are carried out collectively through task distribution and regular meetings. These activities align with Mataraman Granary's goals and philosophy. (2) The dimensions of participation include planning, implementation, utilization of results, and monitoring and evaluation, with the highest participation found at the implementation stage. (3) The elements of participation include mental and emotional involvement, willingness to contribute, and shared responsibility. (4) The types of participation consist of passive, informative, consultative, functional, interactive, and self-mobilization participation. No participation driven by material incentives was found, as the women's motivation is based on social values, a sense of belonging, and group solidarity
