

ABSTRACT

Activity and the quality of Indonesia's economy has a very close relationship with labor conditions, particularly to create productive employment opportunities. Although we have entered the recovery phase of the economic crisis / monetary longlife crisis but the results are not quite optimal a positive impact on solving the problem of employment. In the process of economic development includes economic activities that seek optimizing the use of economic factors provided thereby creating economic added value. The Policy to expansion of employment opportunities is an important policy in the economic development, because one measure assessing a country's economic success is demand of the employment created by economic development.

Employment opportunities it is the most basic socio-economic aspects. Based on the survey results revealed Wages and GDP variable is not significant and statistically significant effects on employment in the province of Yogyakarta Special Region. While the variables of population and level of education is statistically real and significant effect on employment in the province of Yogyakarta Special Region.